Mount McKinley (Unit 45)

Predominately snow and ice. Mount McKinley is the highest mountain in North America and a dominant feature on the Alaska landscape.

Very heavy use on the West Buttress route (mostly in May and June) with variable levels of climbing on a dozen other routes. Seasonal Ranger camp at 14,200 feet with helicopter landing zone. Fixed lines from 15,200ft to 16,200ft and rescue cache at 17,200ft. Frequent overflights. Wilderness experience very poor during main climbing season, excellent in off-season.
